Welcome in Marseille !

The International Network of Genocide Scholars (INoGS) was founded 13 years ago in order to provide genocide studies with a non-partisan community in which to research and present analysis on any aspect of genocide studies. Since our founding, we have maintained support of research-led analysis rather than any type of policy agendas.

For more than 70 years, academics, practitioners, and researchers from a variety of disciplines have indeed addressed the issue of genocide and mass violence using a wide range of empirical and theoretical approaches, exploring case studies throughout history and geography, and numerous past and present events or processes around the world. Interdisciplinary research across humanities, legal and social sciences, as well as comparison, have thus characterized genocide studies right from the start.

However, even if extreme violence is relevant to various medical fields such as psychology, psychiatry and forensic anthropology for example, dialogue between medical sciences and humanities or social sciences has been slow to develop on these issues. The 6th INoGS Global Conference, held at the Medical Faculty of Aix-Marseille University on 4-7 July 2018, therefore seeks to open new avenues for research on extreme violence while fostering interdisciplinary debates on questions regarding its diagnosis, treatment or recovery, and more broadly genocide and mass crime prevention, prosecution, acknowledgement and memorialisation. Our 48 panels and roundtables have therefore been set up along thematical and not disciplinary lines, in order to to facilitate and support these debates.

On behalf of the 6th INoGS Global Conference on Genocide steering committee, I would thus like to extend a very warm welcome to all participants from the 5 continents and more than 30 different countries, hoping that this meeting held in Marseille, a 25 centuries old port city wide open to the world, will be an real opportunity to consider how and where we would like to take our network forward.

Élisabeth ANSTETT (chair of the steering committee)

Together with Laetitia DELOUIS (coordinator), Valéry RAVIX (IT manager) and Sophie GUEUDET (executive secretary)

CONFERENCE PRELIMINARY PROGRAM

Wednesday, 4 July 2018

First opening plenary session, 13h30-15 :00 (Amphitheatre Toga, Main building, 1st floor)

Welcome, opening remarks, and presentation of the conference by Elisabeth ANSTETT (CNRS, France) chair of the 6th INoGS Global Conference on Genocide Steering Committee.

Opening keynote speech of Alejandro CASTILLEJO-CUÉLLAR

Alejandro Castillejo-Cuellar is associate professor and director of the Critical Studies Program on Political Transitions, Universidad de los Andes, Colombia. He also takes part of the international projects "Building Inclusive Societies with Young People in 5 Post-Conflict Countries" funded by the Arts and Humanities Research Council (England) and "Desapariciones. Estudio en perspectiva transnacional de una categoría para gestionar, habitar y analizar la catástrofe social y la pérdida (funded by the Ministry of Economy, Spain). He is currently working on a new book "After the Traces of the Body: Ethnophonies, In(materialities), and the Sensory Life of the Missing in Colombia".

Narrative, spatiality and the itinerant certification of collective pain in Colombia's search for the missing

In this presentation I would like to explore the ways in which the narratives of violence in Colombia, particularly in the context of the legal process that administered the demobilization of former paramilitaries, emerged through the connection between a series of procedures that sought to territorialize and localize the social experience of injury and harm. The text draws partly from my work as an ethnographer of transitional scenarios (understood broadly as technologies of change) and is part of a larger effort to understand the different and contentious registers in which collective pain dwells socially and the multiplicity of languages (technological, aesthetical, subjective, etc.) that a society has at hand in order to apprehend it. This text is also part of a book in progress "after the traces of the Body: Ethnophonies, In(materialities), and the Sensory Life of the Missing in Colombia".

Second plenary session, 13h30-15 :00 (Amphitheatre Toga, Main building, 1st floor)

Keynote speech of Bertrand TAITHE

Bertrand Taithe is professor of Cultural History at the University of Manchester. He directs the Humanitarian and Conflict Response Institute at the same university. He has written extensively on the history of medicine and war, humanitarianism and charity. He is currently completing a monograph entitled: the Humanitarians a History.

Unreliable Witnesses?

Humanitarian evidence and narratives.

This paper wishes to examine how humanitarians have engaged with the concept of genocide and, on occasion announced or denounced genocides. Working on the examples of Biafra, Cambodia under Vietnamese occupation (1979-1989) in particular this paper examines how humanitarians have invested in the concept of genocide to found their own legal and historical relevance and legitimacy. Taking two examples of 'not quite genocides' enables us to explore how humanitarians worked from the incomplete evidence of field work to attempt to establish a meaningful picture of events taking place in difficult to reach war zones. As the only witnesses, humanitarians have played a key part as mediators of atrocities - yet their evidence sometimes fail to reach legal or historical standards of truth. Other case studies with which the paper will conclude (Bosnia and Rwanda) showed that as NGOs matured in the 1990s so did their understanding of the historical significance of denouncing genocide.

Third and closing plenary session, 11 :00-12 :30 (Amphitheatre Toga, Main building, 1st floor)

Keynote speech of Elisa von JOEDEN-FORGEY.

Elisa von Joeden-Forgey is the Dr. Marsha Raticoff Grossman Associate Professor of Holocaust and Genocide Studies at Stockton University in New Jersey, Director of the graduate Genocide Prevention Certificate Program, and President of Genocide Watch. She is also on the editorial board of Genocide Studies International and former First Vice President of the International Association of Genocide Scholars. She earned her BA in History from Columbia University and a PhD degree in modern German and African history from the University of Pennsylvania. In 2010 and 2011 Dr. von Joeden-Forgey was a workshop coordinator for the Raphael Lemkin Program in Genocide Prevention hosted by the Auschwitz Institute for Peace and Reconciliation in Krakow and Oswiecim, Poland. Her current research on race, gender and genocide has appeared in the Journal of Genocide Studies and Prevention, the Oxford Handbook on Genocide, New Directions in Genocide Research, Genocide : A Bibliographic Review, Hidden Genocide : Power, Knowledge and Memory, and the recent collected volumes Reconstructing Atrocity Prevention, Economic Aspects of Genocide, Mass Killing, and Their Prevention, and Women and Genocide : Survivors, Victims, Perpetrators. She is currently completing a book on gender and the prevention of genocide that will be published by the University of Pennsylvania Press.

Human Security from the Grassroots : Power, History, & the Dialogic Imagination (or A New Approach to Genocide Prevention)

In this presentation I will examine some of the prevalent assumptions about genocide prevention in the world today with reference to the genealogies of praxis that undergird them, specifically the contradictions within nineteenth and twentieth-century forms of humanitarianism, and how these assumptions have led us to a situation of political deadlock in which we are left without models of agency as mass atrocity unfolds around us. As a response to the political deadlock, I will suggest a dialogic approach to human security and long-term genocide prevention that engages concepts drawn from the fields of peacemaking, radical public health, reproductive justice, and critical pedagogy.
